Business: The group's principal activities are to develop and manufacture products and technologies for acquiring, analyzing and managing complex image data from live animals. The group combines systems biology and low-light optical imaging to create powerful new biophotonic imaging technology that advances the ability of scientists to explore genes, proteins, pathogens and tumor cells in living animals in real time, providing predictive data that is designed to substantially improve the success rate in drug development. The biophotonic imaging technology is used to provide more accurate and previously unavailable data intended to result in the ability to make more timely and cost-effective decisions at every step in the drug development process.

Business: http://www.xtlbio.com/index1024.html A biopharmaceutical public company engaged in the acquisition, development and commercialization of pharmaceutical products for the treatment of infectious diseases, particularly the prevention and treatment of hepatitis B and C. The company has three products under development including HepeX-B or HBV that will prevent re-infection with hepatitis B in liver transplant patients, XTL-6865 or HCV to prevent hepatitis C virus re-infection following a liver transplant and XTL-2125 from the HCV-SM small molecule development program which is a small molecule non-nucleoside polymerase inhibitor for the treatment of chronic hepatitis C. The company plans to continue the clinical development of XTL-6865 and XTL-2125, complete the HepeX-B Phase IIb clinical trial on behalf of our partner Cubist and transition all aspects of HepeX-B development to Cubist, and seek to in-license or acquire additional clinical stage compounds, or compounds in advanced pre-clinical development. The company has a proprietary Trimer technology that allows XTLbio to generate human monoclonal antibodies, validate drug efficacy in a biologically-relevant system i.e. models for hepatitis C virus (HCV) and hepatitis B virus (HBV) and optimise lead candidates for further development. The company's offices are at Israel, Massachusetts, and North Carolina.
